

Allison Linney, MBA

Allison Linney is the President and Founder of Allison Partners, LLC, a woman-owned firm founded with the belief that people are at the core of an organization's success. On that foundation, the team at Allison Partners serves individual, corporate, non-profit and government clients seeking to integrate human performance theory and business strategy. By focusing on organizational context as well as individuals' skills and behavior, Allison Partners brings candor and experience to help clients achieve business goals while satisfying employees' needs.

Ms. Linney has built a career of commitment to her clients' achievement of their goals. A former consultant within Accenture's Human Performance Service Line, she received an M.B.A. from the Darden Graduate School of Business at the University of Virginia. Together with her colleagues, Allison brings both sound theory and practical experience to the challenges of organizational development. She has also worked with HMOs, University hospital systems, providers of healthcare information systems, a national provider of physical and occupational therapy services, small group practices, and free health clinics.

Ms. Linney's expertise spans communication strategy and implementation, leadership development, professional coaching, organization design and development, group facilitation, training design, project management, change management and process engineering. In addition, she has significant field experience in diversity and has developed strategies and conducted training programs to help foster diversity within teams and organizations.
