

The New Art of Leadership: Learning the Skills to Lead Now and into the Future

Faculty: Kevin O'Connor, MA

Increasingly, physicians are entering leadership roles as a result of realignment in the health care delivery system. Their success and that of their organizations relies on the skills of these physician leaders. In this interactive workshop, learn your style, the level of your leadership, and craft an effective model for leading into the future.

Clarify your leadership goals

Assess the methods you will use to lead

Ascertain the philosophy which guides your actions

Utilize new skills as you lead yourself, your colleagues, and your organization

This will be a highly interactive day devoted to helping each participant become the better leader that they want to become. This workshop will encourage learners to assess her or his own style and level of leadership. Each participant will then craft an effective and unique model for their particular situation. Leadership goals, methods and guiding philosophy will also be discussed. A major emphasis of this workshop is to help each attendee acquire the skills necessary to groom themselves and others for leadership today and in the future.

Objectives:

Address the question: "What am I as a leader?" by assessing and evaluating their own Personal Leadership philosophy, style, and method.

Address the question: "What does the group and the task require from my leadership?" by assessing and evaluating task group leadership.

Address the question: "What does my organization need from me to make the next right step?" by assessing and evaluating organizational leadership.

Address the question: "What lies ahead for me and my peers?" by assessing and evaluating the future of medical leadership.
